Phyllis Wormwood Scholarship

Background:

Phyllis Wormwood was born in Appleton and taught English, Spanish, and Drama at Seymour High School from 1949 to 1956. She also taught English at Neenah High School for one year before moving to New York City. There she earned a Master of Art degree in speech education and a Master of Science degree in library science from Columbia University. She was employed with the New York Public Library for 23 years before she retired in 1994 and returned to Appleton. Phyllis had a desire to help others, especially children, through education. Prior to her death, she established a charitable bequest as a way to leave a legacy of caring.
